

Robb Woods is known for his ability to capture the magnificence of light, mood, and spirit of the Arizona landscape.

As a young boy growing up in Glendale, Arizona, Woods became fascinated with the magazine illustrations of Norman Rockwell and Maxfield Parrish. In his formative years he spent many hours with a pencil in hand. With an artist's eye, Woods discovered the marvels of light and contrast, but like so many artist's, Woods spent most of his twenties at a 'steady job' working for the City of Phoenix Survey Department. At age thirty-one, Woods met his wife Shirley and together they moved to Los Angeles where he was accepted into the prestigious Art Center College of Design in Pasadena, California.

Woods has since spent his life pursuing his artistic goals, including a period of time as a commercial illustrator for the ABC Television art department. Shortly after their move back to Arizona, Woods easily found gallery representation and success with his oil paintings. He is inspired daily by his love for the southwest landscape and his passion for painting.
